ELECTION DAY - 1968

We are on the eve of a major national election at a time when it has become increasingly popular to display disloyalty and disrespect for our Flag, our elected officials and our National Policy both at home and overseas.

There is lacking in the land the faith and pride that helped build our country to its present stature. We have turned against the institutions and the system that made us the richest, most powerful nation on earth with tremendous potential for helping undeveloped peoples at home and abroad.

Yet, has anything really changed? We still have the natural resources and the brain power to do anything we put our collective will to accomplish.

We still have the governmental machinery which allows us to change our leaders by an orderly process when we feel a change is for the best.

We still have dedicated men who will step forward to provide leadership when we call upon them in times of national need.

What are conspicuous by their absence are plain old-fashioned patriotism and pride in being an American.

If you don't agree with the President, don't damn the Country. Work for a change that will improve our leadership. Now is the time to express your convictions at the polls.

If you don't believe in the tax system or some other Governmental program, don't damn the Congress or the legislative system. Let your representatives know your feelings and get your friends to do the same. Express your convictions at the polls.

There is an orderly way to change things -- cast your vote -- but there is no room for violence and flagrant disregard for the law and order established by the devotion and courage of those Americans who went before us.

Don't excuse yourself or anyone else for letting your feelings and actions become a disgrace to your Flag and Country just because the human element in the system fails you.

There is still nothing wrong with America that a return to pride, loyalty and dedication to the basic tenets of our Constitution could not cure.

Think it over...AND VOTE.
